

ABSTRACT

According to the present invention, a system and method provides for monitoring and controlling light propagation in optical transmission systems. The system either includes an optical circulator coupled to an optical add mechanism and is used to detect light propagation, or an optical monitoring device is coupled to the optical circulator and to the optical add device via a feedback path to control light propagation.